Room with a View – Boca Raton

The design process is always a collaboration between designer and client, and that process can be especially rewarding with repeat clients. Designer Gerald Pomeroy had the opportunity to design a second home in Boca Raton for a beloved client, and the result speaks for itself. The modern structure features floor to ceiling windows, 25-foot glass panels that maximize the magnificent ocean vistas. This enviable view served as the inspiration for the colors, fabrics, silhouettes and lighting for the project.

“Because of the stark, modern nature of the structure, we needed to think outside of the box to give it a warmer, transitional vibe that was appropriate for my client with her East Coast sensibilities,” said Pomeroy. He achieved the desired look through the liberal use of textures and glazes on wall surfaces as well as the unexpected choice of fabric for the dramatic 25-foot panels framing the view overlooking the ocean. He also introduced a contemporized version of pilasters in warm driftwood brown to define the spaces and add architectural detail.

The dramatic, over-scale lanterns hanging in the living area are unexpected and glamorous, draw the eye to the living quarters and interact with the second floor as well. The scale of furniture and mix of contemporary with classics adds depth and interest. Because of these extraordinary views, the chosen color palette was organic, light and airy. Greens, blues and beiges throughout the space allow Mother Nature to take the lead.

Gerald Pomeroy Interiors, founded in 1995, has lived up to its founding commitment to provide clients an exceptional design experience as well as a breathtaking, unique interior. Specializing in residential interiors, Gerald and his team have created highly personal spaces that have won multiple awards, been featured in leading design publications, and extended his New England-based operation to New York, Chicago and Europe.
